Q: Linux how to send an alert, or file using sms (mobile) I'm currently thinking about changing my office to linux. My question is, how can I send a warning to my mobile using sms? E.g.: Is it possible to send a warning like "your password is about to expire, in less than an hour you will lose it!" A: When you use whatever you choose as a text-based mail-client, check for incoming messages. If they contain 'UNSUCCESSFUL LOGIN' (or similar), that's when you could do it. Archives Archives Searching for news? The worst economic crisis the world has ever experienced -- caused by the international financial system -- has finally come to a head. With the U.S. presidential election a few weeks away, Barack Obama has finally proposed a plan for addressing the problem. However, while the government wants to protect the interests of the big banks, the plan goes far beyond what the government has said it will do. The plan could cause systemic damage to the U.S. economy as well as making a complete financial mess of the world. But the planned U.S. rescue plan can be stopped before it becomes a total fiasco. Do the plan's proposals to restructure the world's financial system go far enough? The Crisis

Needed to be Put to Rest
The crisis in the U.S. financial system has been ongoing for about two years. Although the crisis has yet to produce any major economic problems, it has become impossible for people to do business with one another. With the U.S. economy at stake, even people who have been relatively well off have suffered economic hardships. At this point, the government says it wants to help those worst affected by the crisis. The government wants to restructure the financial system by taking it out of private hands and turning it over to a government agency. While the plan has been proposed, it has not been voted on in the U.S. Senate or the House of Representatives. It also cannot go into effect without approval from the U.S. Congress. There is no guarantee that the government will be able to meet its goals. Furthermore, the government has not given details of how it will implement the program. What Will the Obama Plan Say? The Obama plan is a program designed to take control of the U

University Some of the most successful researchers in life sciences and biotechnology have been from the U.S., but their political contribution lags behind their federal funding, according to a new study. The study, coauthored by Darren Eisenberg, an assistant professor of management and organizational behavior at the Daniels College of Business at the University of Denver, was published this week in the journal Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences. Eisenberg and his co-author at Denver, Enrique Farach, studied public policy think tank foundations in the United States and investigated how much money they give to researchers. They found that the U.S. is the second-largest recipient of federal funding of researchers, after the United Kingdom. However, the amount of money from foundation support of those researchers in the U.S. is only about 10 percent of the total, while the UK is nearly three times greater. “The United States is a great place, but we have a ways to go,” says Eisenberg. “We’re not investing the resources into these programs that we could.” In addition, while the United Kingdom has a strong tradition of giving to academic institutions—supported by the British tax system—the United States has often underinvested in higher education. “The United States is often criticized for not spending enough on research and science, and all too often we're engaged in a race with the United Kingdom," says Evan Kyllonen, the senior author and co-director of the UK Research Leadership Group, which partners with the Department for International Development in the United Kingdom. "We have a number of excellent universities and research facilities in the United States, and this study would suggest that we've been pretty successful in supporting research innovation there," he says. "The results of the study will be extremely interesting to policy makers and other academic leaders because it highlights the importance of philanthropy and public investment in supporting research.” In addition to the United Kingdom’s public research funding of more than $5 billion, the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services provides approximately $1.5 billion per year to the National Institutes of Health. The researcher’s results also show that the proportion of
