I am trying to understand where are the configuration files (cloud-config) placed on a machine when the machine is booted via cloud-init. I am assuming that this happens once and not more than once. Also what are the directories/sub-directories under /etc created during the boot process? Here's what I have found so far: /etc/cloud/cloud.cfg.d/ is the file system where the configuration for cloud-init is stored. If there's a config file called upstart-sources.cfg and you run sudo service cloud-init start, it creates the file /etc/init/cloud-init.conf. I couldn't find any documentation for an init.d service. If you run sudo service cloud-init store, the system would not be shut down.

Note: I have not found the default configuration file. Thanks. A: Cloud-init is responsible for configuration stored/loaded by cloud-init, the short answer is in the config file called cloud-config.py. The configuration for cloud-init can be found in the config directory at /etc/cloud/cloud.cfg.d/ After Justin Bieber broke ties with Miami strip club madam Rita Foster, who was responsible for his 2009 arrest, Foster had another relationship with one of her dancers (by paying her under the table) to keep the whole thing from coming out.
