That is more likely to be something like, ‘What do they want me to do?’” C. Jay Thompson explained this perennial question to me in a talk at the URI Center for Human Values. The question is a very good one that I often asked at the same point in negotiations: What is the prospect that I am agreeing to? What is the prospect that I am asking for? In this context, Thompson’s talk explored the value of detecting emerging trends in the short run and formulating concepts and assumptions that convey the nuances in recent real-world phenomena. For example, he argued that these evolving trends may imply that the possibility of agreement is higher and the probability of success lower. These questions don't just provide insight into the prospective risks and potential rewards of the negotiation at hand; they also tell us something about our clients and ourselves. These emerging trends can signal whether our clients are getting smarter, or whether they are getting dumb. Turning to our own clients, they are instructive in another way. Many
