Adobe Photoshop CC Image: Wired For this list we'll be looking at the software's core capabilities, which include: Raster Manipulation You can use different filters, pens, layers, and even manual adjustments to alter your photographs. Photoshop allows you to create new layers, cut or paste layers, merge, and even reveal hidden layers. Photoshop has so many tools that it's nearly impossible to list them all. Here are some of the most useful ones: Adobe's website categorizes its tools into the following major sub-headings: Tools for Retouching, Filters for Adjusting Photos, Tools for Compositions, Tools for Drawing, and Tools for Retouching. There are so many other tools that Photoshop has, that we've picked four of our favorite tools for creating various artistic effects. Tools for Retouching The tools within this sub-category are good for cutting out unwanted areas in a photo and add effects such as shadows and brightness changes. Layer Masks This tool allows you to overlay one image on top of another. You can use this to mask, or remove, parts of the image you want to keep while leaving the rest. You can delete or leave items in a mask. Layer masks allow you to easily cut out or add effects to certain areas. You can view and create layer masks by navigating to the Layers tab and selecting the Layer Mask icon (it looks like an X), located in the upper-right corner. The Layers tab also allows you to create and manage your layers. You can cut, copy, or paste layers on top of one another, and merge them. You can also use the Layers/Paths/Fx tab to add special effects to your layers. The Gradient tool allows you to draw a gradient. These are often used to make colors fade across a photo or to add a subtle glow. The Gradient tool is found in the Tools for Adjusting Photos and the Tools for Drawing sub-categories. Exposure Adjustments The level adjustment tool adds or removes light and dark values within a photo. You can move the exposure slider left or right to find the best balance. The Exposure options can be found in the Layers/Adjustments/Levels sub-category. The Hue-Saturation tool allows you to change the color within an

Buprenorphine for opioid dependence: efficacy and safety in a randomised controlled trial. The efficacy and safety of buprenorphine for opioid dependence has not been systematically studied. We report the efficacy and safety of buprenorphine in managing opioid dependence in a large, randomised, controlled trial. We conducted a parallel, double-blind, placebo-controlled, randomised trial involving 331 people at 105 community-based health facilities in New South Wales, Australia. Participants received buprenorphine (12 mg twice daily for 7 days, then 8 mg twice daily for 7 days, then 8 mg once daily for 28 days) or placebo for opioid dependence. The primary outcomes were retention in treatment (defined as attending at least 50% of prescribed visits), treatment response (defined as no missing doses and achieving abstinence or use of non-opioid medication for at least three consecutive weeks), and treatment retention (measured in person). Compliance with treatment was also assessed. Treatment retention at 28 days was significantly higher in the buprenorphine (78%) versus the placebo group (68%), $P=0.026$, and was significantly higher in the buprenorphine group compared with the overall effectiveness of treatment (75%) [odds ratio (OR) for buprenorphine group compared with placebo group=1.8; 95% CI 1.0-3.3]. Treatment retention was also significantly higher in the buprenorphine group compared with the overall retention in treatment (83%) (OR=1.9; 95% CI 1.1-3.1) and in the placebo group (76%) (OR=2.1; 95% CI 1.1-3.6). Treatment response was seen in 19% of participants in the buprenorphine group and 3% of those in the placebo group (OR=6.9; 95% CI 1.9-25.3). A higher proportion of participants in the buprenorphine group than in the placebo group met the criteria for treatment retention (OR=2.1; 95% CI 1.2-3.4). Non-compliance was similar in the two groups (22%). The most common reason given for treatment discontinuation was drug withdrawal (11%). Treatment retention was significantly higher in the buprenorphine group compared with the placebo group and in the buprenorphine group compared with the overall effectiveness of treatment, and the safety profile was similar to that

For indispensable reporting on the coronavirus crisis, the election, and more, subscribe to the Mother Jones Daily newsletter. A federal judge on Monday dismissed a lawsuit filed by a coalition of 12 states and the District of Columbia challenging President Trump's controversial decision to end the Obama-era Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals (DACA) program. In ruling, Judge John Bates dismissed most of the plaintiffs' claims, including those against the federal government and its agencies and those based on the separation of powers. He upheld some claims against the states that the government proposed to deport people who had come to the United States as children. The government had argued that DACA, which was enacted in 2012, was unconstitutional because it lacked proper congressional authorization. Bates' ruling found that DACA was not enacted in violation of the Constitution. The judge also determined that the separation of powers didn't necessarily prevent the administration from ending DACA. The judge did, however, rule that the Justice Department must provide written justification for its reasoning behind the decision. "Our unanimous conclusion is this: DACA was never authorized by statute. An unlawful program cannot give rise to an individual obligation," Bates wrote in his 74-page ruling. In his decision, Bates also recognized the concerns of the states and the District of Columbia that the Trump administration's decision to end DACA could lead to "massive and irreparable harm." Bates wrote that the government would not likely be able to show that DACA's cancellation "would not work irreparable injury, as a matter of law and fact." Bates wrote that the federal government seemed to argue that a "vital and public interest" of the United States and the states is "safe and secure borders." The judge noted that his ruling did not "in any way reflect an opinion about the wisdom of that policy or whether it is wise." "The purpose of deferred action is to mitigate the otherwise substantial harm which would be occasioned by a reasonable certainty of deportation." The attorneys general of four states and the District of Columbia as well as New York and 16 other states filed the lawsuit on Jan. 18, after Trump announced his decision to end DACA. As Mother Jones has reported, California and Illinois— which each have at least 400,000 DACA recipients—along with New York and 16 other states will likely file an
