Green pigs and wild boar are eating through a turf area and creating problems for farmers (Picture: Peter Diplock/UIG via Getty Images) There are two types of hipsters, and they've had them for a long time now. One type is hip, cool and approachable to those not in their clique. The other are the other sort - the ones who've never washed any clothing since becoming cool and the only thing they know how to play is 'Who let the dogs out?' The latter has now found a fair way of channelling his awesome creativity. An inventive farm owner has been trying to rid his land of a host of small wild animals and has tried to recreate a whole ecosystem in the process. It's not the first time hippo poo has been ploughed into the ground, to create a mat for grass to grow on, but it's certainly the most elaborate. We feel a bit sorry for the pig, as he was brought in to create the scenic backdrop to the farm, but he seems to be enjoying it. The grass is then watered with manure and fertilised with pig poo, while flowers are planted in the centre. He is even replanting the field with a new crop of Kale so that he can just start again next year. You see, some people take their pre-digested meal and just throw it over the fence. This 648931e174
