often selected from a group consisting of, manganese acetate, zinc acetate and combinations thereof. The method also provides for concentrating the reaction product, wherein the method includes flowing the reaction product stream comprising the reaction product, water, excess zinc and calcium into a stream of hydrogen gas, in order to convert the manganese into an oxide form. The method also provides for oxidizing the manganese to an oxide. The oxide is selected from a group consisting of manganese dioxide and manganese trioxide. Another object of the invention is to provide an improved method of recovering manganese from a zinc production process. This method of recovering manganese includes the steps of a) oxidizing the manganese in solution with an oxidizing agent, b) recovering the manganese as an oxide, and c) reducing the manganese oxide. A first step in the reduction of the manganese oxide is oxidizing the manganese to form manganese dioxide. The oxidation of manganese preferably uses an oxidizing agent, such as nitric acid, sulfuric acid, and oxygen. Manganese (IV) is oxidized to manganese (III) and (V) in solution with an oxidizing agent. Oxidation of manganese is readily accomplished with air in a high-temperature reactor. Typically, oxidation is accomplished by contacting the manganese in solution with air at a temperature of up to 500°C. Other oxidative agents that may be used to oxidize manganese include, but are not limited to, O₃, O₂, nitric acid, sulfuric acid, and KClO₃. Reduction of manganese dioxide is accomplished by catalytic reduction of MnO₂ with hydrogen and catalyst. In order to facilitate the reduction, the manganese dioxide may be mixed with a suitable reducing agent, such as alkaline salts, or chemically reduced to manganese trioxide. Manganese trioxide can be produced in a wide range of conditions, but preferably is produced at a temperature of from about 100°C. to about 300°C. and hydrogen pressure of from about 0.1 MPa to about 10 MPa. Reduction is accomplished with from 0.1 to 10% by weight of a reducing agent relative to the manganese dioxide. Preferably, reduction is accomplished with about 1% to about 5% by
