system. More particularly, it relates to a charge prevention system for a battery, e.g. used to supply power to a vehicle's electrical system, where the charge prevention system detects the charging status of the battery. It is often desirable to control the charging of the battery used to supply power to a vehicle's electrical system. For example, when the charge of the battery is low, the vehicle's electrical system may shut itself down and/or turn itself off to prevent the battery from discharging. This prevents the battery from being discharged during the vehicle's idle or parking mode, because the battery would then have insufficient power to operate the vehicle. Alternatively, when the charge of the battery is high, the vehicle's electrical system may shut itself down or turn itself off to prevent overheating of the vehicle's electrical system. Some conventional vehicle battery charging systems use an electronic controller to determine the charge level of the battery. In some known electronic battery charge management systems, the electronic controller detects whether the battery voltage increases, decreases, or remains constant when the controller is charging the battery. If the charge of the battery is low, the electronic controller may detect 1cdb36666d
