The Belva Theatre, which once hosted everything from silent films to Broadway shows, is getting new life after a two-year, $8 million restoration project was completed. Thomas Jefferson University's Belva Theatre got a major facelift after being closed and boarded up in 2013. Tom Wiederholt, who helped find the theatre in the early 1970s, said he was ready to go into the Belva to prepare for the revival of "Showboat" when he got a call from a former staff member. "He said, 'This is going to be the greatest revival of 'Showboat' in history. You need to see this now,'" Wiederholt said. "It was like a phone call from God." The Belva, which opened in 1926, was the home of live performances before films and Broadway came to dominate Philadelphia's cultural scene. It closed and was boarded up in 2013 for a $8 million restoration effort that was led by the Philadelphia Foundation and included the help of a Japanese company, Mirakurie, that pioneered the use of 3-D computer generated imagery in all types of construction. With the enthusiastic involvement of a large cast of local actors, the arts community and the city of Philadelphia, the $8 million effort to restore the 89-year-old theatre is considered a success. The conservatory of the school where Tom Kiley, the school's artistic director, works, was renovated and used to host classes of students in restoration, preservation, acoustics, lighting, design, special effects and orchestra. Kiley said that when he was a boy in the 1960s, the Belva Theatre was still used for live performances and the exterior was an intimate, welcoming place. "Then they boarded it up," he said. Matt Seibert, a musical theater enthusiast, said the restoration "has been really stunning to experience as an audience member. I knew a lot about it before, but it's like watching a brand new movie." Sara Meers, a classical music fan, said seeing a classic musical like "Showboat" in the Belva Theatre is the perfect combination of live theater and music. "It's very relaxing and it's very intimate and one can experience the cast interacting

Again, this is not a reflection on your faith. You are right to be concerned and these things happen. This is a reflection on the church and on the young people of our world. The world is so wicked that we have to be careful in how we protect ourselves against threats. We don't have to be at the point where we have to lock our doors and bin the key. That is not the kind of security Jesus had in mind for the little ones in his day. He told us to pray a PRAYER OF SUCCOUR: "But the young men spoke of him again, how that Jesus was teaching every day in the temple, and every day at evening he sat down with the children and trained them. Then they said to the disciples, what could this mean? Who is this, that even the children ask him? And Jesus said to them, For the young men declare, 'Of a truth this is the Prophet'." (Luke 19:40-41) We need a childlike faith. We need to remember that Jesus does not come just to serve adults. He comes to serve us. Think of Jesus as a child. He did not waste his time. He would stay home all day in his playroom. He did not go out to play football with other children. He would stay home and play with his brothers and sisters. He did not go to birthday parties or Christmas celebrations. He stayed home with his parents, playing with his sisters and brothers. He would go to bed when the adults wanted him to go to bed. He would cry when the events of the day had moved him to tears. He would play in his playroom with his toys when his parents said he should be doing something else. He would pray when he was alone. He would pray when he was with his brothers and sisters. He would pray when he was at school. He didn't have a fancy playroom, but he had his prayer room. He would spend hours and hours playing with his toys in there. He would spend hours and hours talking with his Father. If a stranger knocked on his door, he would make sure that all of his brothers and sisters were ready to pray with him. He would have to wait on his Father's timing before he went outside for a play date with his friends. If he said the wrong thing, he would apologise
