Category:Key generatorsSalivary cortisol in athletes: A very simple, reliable and useful method. Salivary cortisol is a simple, noninvasive and inexpensive method of detecting the stress response in athletes of varying training levels. Salivary cortisol provides a continuous, dynamic assessment of the stress response. In recent years, improvements in the sensitivity of salivary cortisol assays have improved the ability to better distinguish between acute and chronic stressors. These data can be used to support the decision-making process in the care of a professional athlete by sports medicine providers, including the decision to apply for a clean sport
