Our objective in putting together the new engine was to reproduce the speed, complexity and authentic physics of real-life football, capturing the flow of the game. Using physics-based animation and next-generation technology, we managed to achieve an entirely new level of playability and immersion. Our stadiums, players, ball, opponent players and artificial intelligence are all recreated with the highest degree of accuracy. Many of the animations and motions were taken from over 500 hours of motion-capture footage - all of which has been used to give you the opportunity to play your favourite football games at the top level, but not without balancing what we did with the ability to create a game that anybody can enjoy. The FIFA series has become one of the most prolific franchises in the world, with a passionate and dedicated following. However, our first goal was to ensure that every aspect of the game, from the small animations in the corner flags to the camera and graphics, could be displayed on the highest levels. Our goal was to release this new engine on PlayStation 4, Xbox One and PC to ensure that we could make all of the changes in the same way - we wanted to ensure that our players would enjoy the experience in their home environment the most. We had a lot of fun working on the custom engine and were extremely happy with the results. We look forward to hearing your feedback as we continue development on FIFA 22 and beyond. A look at FIFA's new engine, this time on PlayStation 4 We'd love to hear your thoughts on FIFA 22 on the PlayStation Blog or on Twitter using #FIFA22Long forgotten episodes dating back to the 1987 season are coming back to haunt Steve Spurrier's head. While a rising superstar back in the early '90s and a Heisman Trophy winner in '87, C.J. Watts had one very expensive low. The University of South Carolina running back faked a handoff and, instead, ran right into the Lions' defense, which resulted in a safety. That came in a game that ultimately saw the Gamecocks lose 59-0. While there are few things Spurrier hates more than turnovers, Watts' mistake was not one of them. "The play got to me so much, I just wanted to run up and hug the guy," Spurrier said on his College GameDay Coach podcast. For his part, Watts said it "was a big one" and "I had a bad
