March 20, 2015 1:07 pm Lovely cool story, almost as good as the 1st one. But I am puzzled by some parts of the story : In my opinion, the story starts as a comedy, but it turns to serious later. Not a problem, but... - If he meets her in Pakistan, why she suddenly becomes deaf? - If she has to take her to hospital, then why the other guy in the car has a heart attack, without any reason? When he first met her in the airport, he said that, he has a daughter, the one he was looking for is his daughter, and he never imagined to find this girl, his lost love in Pakistan. How can you ignore all those? How come you don't see all the things that you did? Same with the 2nd part of the story. You are telling us that, he has to send the lady back, but what about his daughter? And how come she suddenly comes across the guy, that he has sent her to? She never asked for him? These are the most annoying part in the story. Moreover, you ask us to believe, that she suddenly lost her hearing, and she is okay after healing? Just google for the story and read it. It is not a very good story. March 19, 2015 5:54 am Can someone explain to me why this person hides behind a nickname? Makes absolutely no sense to me. I can understand a fake name and fake picture, but a pseudonym this big? Big deal, the person he was looking for is in Pakistan, but what's the point in using that as a pseudonym? Also, why on earth would someone who only wants to be anonymous use his phone number, and his name, and say he is from the US? So weird. March 18, 2015 2:41 pm This has happened so many times, but I want to be the first to comment on this. I think someone's friend or family member passed away, but not in a way that they would want everyone to know about it. They want to move on and be happy and not really in the grieving process. Sometimes it is just one day, and sometimes years later, and even then it is, "don't mention me," don't make me think about it, I'm fine." That is how the dead family member feels. But the other family member has to be the brave one, the one to ask the
