Fluid transmission systems typically utilize a manifold for the delivery of the fluid and a port into which the fluid is then directed. The manifold includes a port to which a piping assembly is connected to direct the fluid from the manifold to the point of use. At this point, the manifold in fluid connection with the port is joined to the piping assembly by a female connector and a male connector. A particular problem associated with such a system is the connection of the manifold to the female connector which is relatively difficult to accomplish and is made more difficult by the fact that the manifold and the female connector are subjected to great forces as the manifold is lowered into sealing engagement with the port. The prior art attempted to alleviate these problems by providing a bus which is welded at one end to the female connector and the opposite end of the bus is welded to the manifold. Such an assembly is disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 4,423,766 which issued to Bercak et al. on Jan. 3, 1984. b7e8fdf5c8
