For a quantitative analysis of positron emission tomography (PET) data, 3-dimensional (3D) exponential fitting (3DF) is employed to estimate the time activity curve (TAC). However, because of the limited count statistics, conventional 3DF methods frequently encounter a problem of an artificial positive contribution. In the 3DF method, the peak, which has a large coefficient in the 3D TAC, has a bad fitting. In addition, the tail, which has a small coefficient, has a very poor fitting in the case of
