Therapeutic planning and teaching: A case study of emergency medicine in the medical school clinic. This case study aims to demonstrate how a senior emergency medicine (EM) teacher teaches students about a therapeutic plan in the clinic. The teaching is both didactic and clinical. Students benefit from learning how to apply their knowledge of EM to a patient and how to plan a comprehensive treatment for patients. The specific case of a patient with a possible sternotomy wound dehiscence in the abdomen demonstrates how medical students learn from this experience. In this case, the patient and the student are able to provide evidence-based answers to each of the case study questions. This teaching format allows students to construct a patient's history and discuss the likely diagnosis with the patient and the student. Furthermore, the student is able to recommend a plan of treatment with rationale and evidence. Students can learn to practice clinical reasoning through solving problems in the clinic. An important benefit of this teaching format is that students can actively participate in their own learning.
