Rhinoceros Crack 6 v6.Q: How can I extract only the files that are recursively created through web scraping using BeautifulSoup in python? I scraped some pages and I want to remove all but the recursively generated files. I tried using set() function and it shows me that the result has only removed the "index.html" This is my code: import csv, bs4, os import glob from bs4 import BeautifulSoup #all the html code are gathered and stored in a list named html #all the "index.html" are stored in a list called "index" all_html = [] all_html.extend(html for html in os.walk(rootdir) for name in html[2]) all_html = sorted(all_html) for y in all_html: for x in y: if x.endswith(".html") or x.endswith(".htm"): index = 0 for indx in range(0, len(all_html)-1): if all_html[indx] != all_html[indx + 1]: all_html.remove(all_html[indx]) break index += 1 for item in all_html: print(item) The result shows me: /Users/me/Desktop/fancy_folder/index.html /Users/me/Desktop/fancy_folder/index.html I want to remove only the recursively generated files so I get: /Users/me/Desktop/fancy_folder/index.html /Users/me/Desktop/fancy_folder/index.htm A: My approach to this would be to first put all of the files in a single list and then to

Best iPhone And Android apps - vijayr ===== etfb It's a good idea, but I'm going to guess that most of the work involved in creating such a list is going to be done in a few hours. And what's the use of a "top 10" list if only a couple of people ever look at it? ~~~ pxlpshr I would actually agree on the overall concept. There are some really good sites/apps out there that don't get the exposure they deserve. I think that this is a cool way for the users to express what their top picks are. Some of these apps could potentially not make the cut, but for the most part, the list is probably decent. There are certainly opportunities for improvement as well. If that's the target audience, I think most of us get to use some of these apps on a daily basis, so why not create a list of what we use? ----- andrewparker Why does it have to be a "best"? Why not just list the apps that people use the most? It would make the list more readable. Also, I don't think the rank system (like the sites like 1up) do a good job of representing what we use. I can't imagine anyone ever deciding "yes I'm going to waste 50 minutes every morning scrolling down this page just to figure out which iPhone apps I use". I can think of the following 4 things when someone asks "What apps do you use on your iPhone?". 1) Twitter 2) RSS Reader 3) Notes 4) Camera With that in mind, I think the current list would be a lot better if it was just a list of apps people use frequently. ----- dschobel This is a nice idea. It could easily be expanded for other platforms (Android, Blackberry, etc) as well. A few notes: \- remove the network connection from the lock screen. \- add a section for "apps for folks with Mac/PC" \-
