If you are always in need of comparing text between two files in order to find and identify the differences, then you definitely need this utility. DiffLines' basic concept consists in comparing two document text files using two identical text files, one for each document, as references. However, before doing so, the program requires that you install its editor. Simply double click one of the attached files and the utility will launch and open it on the screen. If the executable file is in a zip archive, you have to extract it before launching DiffLines. Next, you have to choose the file with which you want to compare. Don't forget to drag the selected file on the utility window. The left pane will display the current document while the right pane should be filled with the same document you have selected. The file will be in the same screen, side by side, allowing you to perform a textual comparison. Examining the differences As soon as you start the comparison process, you will be able to see the difference between the selected texts. This is exactly what the editor does when comparing two files: it highlights the differences in terms of lines, words, paragraphs and other components. Different components allow you to modify the display of the results. The settings window allows you to define your display preferences in order to help you identify your differences. Some very basic customization options are available when you launch the utility, such as the font, color and style applied to the files as well as to the lines and paragraphs containing the differences, and whether you want to ignore the case, or convert the differences into a comparison of case sensitive texts. However, the tool does not provide any advanced text merging and comparison options. Otherwise, the displayed difference should help you locate and identify which textual component has changed. When you open an ASCII table, the difference will be listed in a side by side view, allowing you to verify and ascertain the exact difference in terms of colors and lines. Managing files You can select which file you want to compare with or alternatively, you can specify an alternate file in case the selected file does not exist. This means that you can compare two files using another document. When you select the alternate option, it should automatically appear on the screen. You can add or remove files in the left pane or right pane. The added file will be displayed automatically, so that you can continue comparing files. DiffLines License Agreement Please read

Pb2+ and Cd2+ cause a fall in gonad weight and ovarian follicule number. The dose needed to produce this effect is directly dependent on the chronic duration of exposure, and it is observed in CD-1 mice and three generations of DF1 strain. The level of serum Pb2+ and Cd2+ is higher in the animals with most intense ovarian weight loss.
