This utility can compare files in a directory tree, or in two directories.'s not - say something that will get you fired, right? Do you feel like you're missing out on good conversation if all you do is talk about atheism? -Do you think your current supervisor is a bad advisor for your department? -Are you concerned about your supervisors ability to balance your views, beliefs, and values with the values of the department? To find out your answers, ask yourself these questions. You don't even have to answer them, but sometimes if you can articulate your concern, others might be able to help you find a solution. Your peers, your colleagues, your supervisors, your department chair, and your people in the Human Resources office. For heaven's sake, use Google. Can you get a copy of your employment contract and your job description? Would you like to share that copy with your supervisor? Even if you don't know where to go, you can start your search at your own department's website. Your department probably has some helpful information. One place to start is the contact page. Look there to see if there is any information about your department's mission statement. If it does exist, you're in luck. That means that your department has some reasonable beliefs about the role of religion in the workplace. You've found something on their own site, so you should be able to have a productive conversation with your supervisor about your concerns. Of course, if there's not anything on your department's site about what is and isn't appropriate for the workplace, you can always speak to your department chair. If you're worried that your department hasn't addressed your questions, don't let that stop you from getting the answers you need. Don't be afraid to email your faculty senate directly. Here is the email address: Email address for Faculty Senate: You won't be the first person to address the senate on this issue. You might be the

In the seventh book of the series, Dumbledore reveals that he owns the Elder Wand. Why didn't he search the wand for information about the Elder Wand? A: He's searched the Elder Wand. He just doesn't know it has been stolen. He explains in order to keep the opinion of the Order of the Phoenix correct: "The wand!" said Dumbledore. "Why didn't he ask it what it wanted? That would certainly have strengthened its case." "It's true," said Hagrid. "You should've seen his face when he waved it for the first time! Never in his life has the old git been so happy! A: As quoted in this article, Dumbledore thought the Elder Wand could perform on the Elder Wand the role of the
