Q: Are interfaces in OCaml stateful? Is it stateful or not? If yes, then explain. A: An interface is polymorphic, it means that functions that work against the interface can accept several different types for their arguments. Only the functions that use the interface (or an instance of it) can be affected by this polymorphism, but the instances of the interface itself are not affected. So, it is mutable, but it is not mutable for all of its contents. For example, you could have type some_interface = { foo : int } and then, you could do let foos_are_mutable = ref false let make_foo x = ref x (* the above line means that foos_are_mutable is bound to be true ) and then you could do something like let test (some_interface x : some_interface) = if ref_not_false then ( foos_are_mutable is now true, so we can assume that x is a {foo = int} *) x The polymorphism of the type makes it possible for you to manipulate it without changing the value of x, since the type foo only exists internally in the reference to it. Induction of a luteinizing hormone surge-like response by cyclic 3',5'-adenosine monophosphate and potassium. Ovarian progesterone secretion is stimulated by adenosine 3',5'-monophosphate (cAMP) and the potassium ion, K+. Reversal of the stimulatory effect of potassium and cAMP on ovarian progesterone secretion is correlated with the secretion of a luteinizing hormone (LH) surge-like response. The present study was carried out to characterize the hormonal and plasma membrane changes associated with the surge-like response. Rats given a single iv bolus of 1.0 mg of cAMP (cholera toxin) had a greater than two-fold increase in serum concentrations of progesterone 30 min later. Intact rats given the 1.0 mg iv cAMP pulse had a mean 2.1-fold increase in serum progesterone as compared to controls. Rats given a single iv injection of 1.0 mg of the cAMP analogue (Sp-5,

You can also use the Magic Wand tool, which allows you to select a color by clicking on an area of an image. This is an extremely useful feature, but only works for certain colors or complex patterns. For instance, the Magic Wand only works in RGB (red/green/blue) or CMYK (cyan/magenta/yellow/key/black) mode, and it only selects solid color areas. You can use the Align and Envelope tools to measure, cut or copy a specific area of an image. The Align tool lets you place a selected region exactly where you want it to appear on the canvas. The Envelope tool can measure and copy any of the edges of the canvas. This allows you to crop an image neatly. The Gradient tool lets you make a selection by clicking on a color and then clicking anywhere on the canvas to place a gradient. A gradient is a kind of color transition that runs from one color to another. Clone Stamp If you're working with a large image, sometimes you may want to copy and paste part of the image. To do this, first create a new file using the Crop Tool or the Rectangular Marquee Tool. Then create a new layer, fill it with white, and select the Clone Stamp Tool from the toolbox. Click and drag on the image to copy it. The new layer will appear on top of your original file. The feature you just learned about is one of the most useful in Photoshop. You can use the Clone Stamp to copy pixels from one area of an image and paste them into another area. This is useful for repairing damaged or corrupt images. There are many different ways to copy pixels, depending on what part of the image you want to copy. In Photoshop CS4, there are at least four methods: The Spot Healing Brush automatically chooses specific pixels by clicking on a damaged area. You can set the Size, Strength, and Tolerance settings in the Spot Healing Brush dialog box. The Healing Brush automatically selects pixels of similar colors to make a selection. You can adjust the brush size, hardness and lightness in the toolbox. The Patch Tool automatically selects pixels by clicking on a damage area. You can set the Size, Strength, and Tolerance settings in the Patch Tool dialog box. The Move Tool lets you select a specific area of the image and copy the pixels to a new area.
