1 – How to open a file for editing in Photoshop Elements? You have two ways to open a file for editing. The first one is to click on the file on the top, and select 'Open for editing' on the panel. Alternatively, if you have a folder with images inside it, you can select the image to open it directly in Photoshop Elements by clicking on the folder. 2 – How to save an image? You can use the top-right button to select 'Save' to save your changes. Or you can go to file > Save and select the format you want to save your image in. 3 – How to duplicate an image or layer? Just select the layer/image you want to duplicate (or all of them in the case of layers) and click on 'Duplicate' in the panel. 4 – How to create a new document? Go to File > New. You can add layers to the new document from here, like regular Photoshop. Click on the dialog box to change to the 'Artboard' tab and select the number of canvases you want to add. You can then move the layers you want to the canvas by clicking and dragging on the Artboard. 5 – How to name layers or Artboards? You can change the Artboard's name by going to Layer > Artboard > Artboard Name. The names of the layers and Artboards are shown in the layer panel when you first open the file. 6 – How to delete a layer? Click on the layer you want to delete and click 'delete' on the panel. 7 – How to crop an image? Use the 'Crop' button on the panel to crop the image to any size you want. You can also resize the image at the same time using the slider. You can also select the area to keep or remove. You can then use the 'Crop' button again to save the cropping changes as a new layer. 8 – How to change the contrast or brightness of an image? Just select the image you want to change and use the contrast or brightness sliders. You can also use the 'Levels' tab to tweak your image. 9 – How to add text to an image? Go to 'L. 05a79cecff

What's New in the?

On Monday, the premier of the season's first-ever program made a bold declaration: His show will set a new standard for what's possible on television in 2018. Rising Canadian star Justin Trudeau, whose popularity was on a multi-year but increasingly solid upward trajectory before he became leader of the Liberal Party earlier this year, vowed to change the political landscape of Canada and create a "greater sense of unity." His new show will air on CBC this fall, and Trudeau promised that the program will highlight challenges, opportunities and solutions for the future -- all using his personality as a catalyst to connect viewers to relevant issues. I'm proud to announce that this fall, we're setting a new standard for how to cut through the partisan noise and get Canadians thinking and talking about what matters. We're doing it with a new prime minister, and it's called @TheRISE. #bcmtf #cdnpolpic.twitter.com/8R0ky0IKIS His answer Ultimately, he says, the new show will raise awareness of issues like immigration and climate change, which as Trudeau saw it, were getting little attention from the political process, and were being used to divide Canadians. "If you're an immigrant, you may not feel like you want to watch the debates at all, because you already feel so isolated from the political process," he said. "We want to find out if that can change. We want to make sure that politics is relevant and that it's more relevant to people's lives." Trudeau said he and the team behind the show believe that the future will be shaped by individuals who can connect with audiences -- whether it's on television, on the Internet, or in a community gathering. "We hope that our show will be part of the excitement that this new prime minister is generating, not just in Canada, but around the world," he said. "And hopefully, we can expand that even further." He spoke of his hope to be a "bridge" and say something beyond what politicians have been able to say in past debates. RISE: Stop the chaos "I'm proud to announce that this fall, we're setting a new standard for how to cut through the partisan noise and get Canadians thinking and talking about what matters," he said. "We're doing it with a new prime minister, and it's called @TheRISE."
