Im working on a plugin that is meant to "embed" content from a different website into my site. To do so, I've setup a simple iframe. However I've run into some problems, as described here: The problem is that, if you're inside the iframe, the content of the iframe is shown inside it. If it's on the same domain, this is fine, if it's on a different domain, the iframe is shown, but the content is displayed outside of it, so the iframe remains empty. Is there any way to make it so that the iframe will only show up if it can actually be shown on the same domain? A: Well, I found the solution myself. It turned out to be quite simple. All I had to do was add a template tag at the end of the iframe, with a unique ID. In that template tag, I added the following piece of code: "> Where that code was to go, of course, I added it to the source code of the iframe. As a result, all I had to do was add the following code to the 'footer-content' of the template: "> d0c515b9f4

The purpose of this descriptive study was to describe the psychosocial well-being of nurse practitioner (NP)-led clinic patients with cancer. Forty-four interviews were conducted with 20 patients. The data were analyzed using qualitative data analysis software and revealed patterns, themes, and subthemes. The results showed that the psychosocial well-being of NP-led cancer patients is improved through their interaction with the nurse, the team members, and the clinic setting. The results also revealed that the experience of care is greater than what could be provided by physicians or even another NP-led team. A qualitative descriptive approach was used for this study. Participants were drawn from a health system in the Midwest that employed NPs for breast, prostate, colorectal, and hematologic oncology. Knowledge of how the psychoeducational dimension of oncology care affects the experience of care is limited. More research is needed to understand why patient experience differs from physician-led care and to determine how it is clinically and economically beneficial to the patient and the health care system.Killallachmore Killallachmore (Killalacmóir, meaning "Killala's ear") is a narrow and wooded estuary, in the West of County Mayo, Ireland. Geography The Killallachmore River flows from the townland of Castlebellingham in the Slieve Russell Mountains of the Boyne Valley in County Cavan, Ireland to the Atlantic Ocean at Blacksod Bay, County Mayo, Ireland. It flows through the West of County Mayo and County Kerry, passing the villages of Tralee (Kilmallock) and Poulanawley (Ballygawley). The Killallachmore Hotel and the ruins of the old Killallachmore Workhouse are located on the banks of Killallachmore River. References Category:Rivers of County Mayo Category:West County Mayo1.
