The effects of intracerebroventricular (icv) administration of corticotropin-releasing factor (CRF) on spontaneous activity and morphine-induced analgesia were examined in the cat. CRF increased spontaneous activity dose dependently (0.01-1.0 micrograms). Antagonist icv administered 30 min before CRF completely abolished the CRF-induced increase in spontaneous activity. This antagonist had no effect when administered into a control site (site in cranial direction from the icv injector). The increase in spontaneous activity following CRF was not associated with any sign of stress as reflected by no change in body temperature or heart rate. CRF did not increase morphine-induced analgesia either at low doses (0.01-0.1 microgram) or at doses that significantly increased spontaneous activity (0.3-1 microgram). The same doses of morphine that were effective in decreasing the spontaneous activity induced by CRF were also analgesic in the control group. These data indicate that CRF modulates only spontaneous activity and not opiate-induced analgesia, and therefore, stress-induced effects in the cat could be due to other mediators than CRF.Shots fired were reported in the area of Windermere and Lake Meigs streets early Thursday evening. People Who Read Books Aloud to Kids Are More Generous Giving children a chance to hear us read aloud books teaches them more about giving and nurtures their imaginations. We may not have had as much practice at reading when we were kids as a lot of parents, but we're doing our best to read just a few of our children's books aloud as a bedtime routine, and it's teaching us all about being more generous, parents and kids alike. At bedtime, every night, you can read a new book to your child. Find books you've read in the past that your child loves, and at least try to do one of them every night. When you have a new picture book, read it. Preferably before you sit down for bed, do one book with your child. Why? Well, aside from the fact that it teaches your child to take turns and be quiet while listening, it also connects them with you. If you always pick a book that you've read to your kids before, there's a good chance they'll think of you when they hear you, and they'll want to turn that image into a story of their own. The most important thing here isn't that reading aloud helps teach your kids about generosity, though. It's that reading books aloud does wonders for your children's imaginations. So much fun. Read aloud, and you'll boost your child's creativity. I think of my kids as precious little artists, and reading to them gives their imaginations a delicious kick.. Its easy to see that $$\frac{\pi_{ij}}{\sqrt{2\pi}}\equiv1.$$ So, the operator D_{m} can be written as $$D_{m}(x)=\prod_{j=1}^{m}(x-j+1/2).$$ [9]{} A.V. Kitaev, A.H. Shen and M.N.
