Step 1: Layer Selection Select the Layer panel (Window > Layers). Now you can add new layers. Photoshop contains a large number of image layers: Photo Layers, Adjustment Layers, Pattern Layers and Adjustment Layers. 1. A Layer: Photoshop has two main types of layers: 1. Photo Layers 2. Adjustment Layers 1.1 A Photo Layer: Photo Layers consist of individual photos that can be layered one on top of another. They can be moved, resized, rotated or adjusted through a sliders with the Layers Panel. The individual photos can be selected by clicking or pressing Ctrl+clicking the individual photo on the Layers Panel. 1.2 Adjustment Layers: Adjustment Layers are layers containing information about a particular image or painting process. They can be added to Photo Layers or independent of it. Adjustment Layers can be resized, rotated or moved. They can also be masked. Adjustment Layers can contain a variety of Photoshop effects such as Levels (the color adjustment), Curves and Channels (the tonal adjustment). You can also use Adjustment Layers to add filters, patterns, and even Photoshop Actions. The information stored in Adjustment Layers can be easily modified through the Adjustment Layers Panel. 2. New Layer To add a new layer, click New. It is now possible to create a new Photoshop file with only one layer. 3. Move, Resize, Rotate a Layer Click the layer thumbnail to expand it to view it in the Layers Panel. Now you can move the layer by clicking and dragging the layer thumbnail, or by dragging the individual photos on the individual layer. The layer will only be moved if you drag the top-most photo. To move a group of layers (i.e. more than one photo), hold down the Shift key when you click on the individual layer. The layer can also be resized by clicking the resize arrow. Click and drag the corner of the selection marquee to resize the layer. Click and drag the top-left or the top-right corner to make the layer smaller or bigger. Select the individual photos on the layer by Ctrl+clicking the individual photo. Click the layer to select only this layer. A red line now indicates the selected layer. This layer can be moved and scaled.

The present invention relates to the art of fluid flow control and, more particularly, to fluid flow control valves and, even more particularly, to control valves for the application of decorative or ornamental tubing in hot tub, swimming pool, bathtub and similar water-related applications. As is well known, it is often desired, for various reasons, to provide ornamental or decorative features in a water-related environment. For instance, plumbing fixtures in home bathrooms include decorative trim as well as standard plumbing fixtures. Hot tubs provide an attractive, refined setting and add to the enjoyment of the application. Swimming pools and bathtubs also provide decorative features and it is of course desirable to decorate a home, office, etc. In addition to the decorative features of decorative plumbing fixtures and similar applications, it is of course desirable to include decorative tubes which serve to not only communicate the fluid but also to provide a decorative function for the tube. The prior art has seen various attempts to provide a suitable control valve for hot tubs, swimming pools, etc. and for providing a decorative tubing feature in the same. As is well known, a hot tub includes water which is heated and circulated under pressure by a pump. Typically, the pump draws water from the hot tub through a fluid inlet and provides the circulated water to the hot tub through a fluid outlet. As is well known, the pump typically includes a control valve for controlling the operation of the pump. Various prior art control valves are generally shown in U.S. Pat. No. 4,871,277; U.S. Pat. No. 4,967,966; U.S. Pat. No. 5,560,527; U.S. Pat. No. 6,109,483; U.S. Pat. No. 6,022,971; U.S. Pat. No. 5,782,115; and U.S. Pat. No. 5,142,833. These prior art patents show a number of different approaches for providing a control valve for hot tubs, swimming pools and the like. The inventor of the present invention has, in the past, seen in other applications, such as U.S. Pat. No. 4,912,798, a control valve with an embedded plate having an aperture through the plate and adapted to control flow of fluid through a decorative tube. The structure disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 4,912,798

Q: C# Threads - Once the Thread is done, how do I destroy it? In my class I have a variable named MyThread. When my class is executed, it has to start 2 threads. However, I would like to destroy the threads once they have done their jobs. For instance: Thread t1 = new Thread(ThreadMethod); t1.IsBackground = true; t1.Start(); Thread t2 = new Thread(ThreadMethod); t2.IsBackground = true; t2.Start(); I would like these threads to do their job and then be destroyed once they are done. A: From your example, you create your threads, start them, create another thread and start that one. Once that finishes the thread reference should automatically be cleaned up, so you don't have to do anything special. You do have to keep track of the thread reference if you want to do things like changing its state. A: If you want to start two threads, have them do their work, and then kill them off, make sure you call the Thread.Join function. That will wait until the thread you are calling it on terminates before the current method is finished. Geoprospecting as the Key to the Study of Climatic Change A team of scientists has demonstrated that pollen sites can be used to determine the type of vegetation present thousands of years ago. (Phys.org) —A team of geoscientists from around the world has demonstrated for the first time that pollen can be used to reconstruct past vegetation. In their paper published in Nature Geoscience, researchers offer a solution to the problem of discerning the exact nature of past vegetation in a large geographic region, without having to rely on the interpretation of a single sample site. When pollen is deposited on a particular plant's female organ during flowering, the pollen becomes locked into the waxy coating and stays there as the species continues to bloom. Dr. Heidi Lofgren and Dr. Sean Payne, of the University of Alaska Fairbanks, examine a moss-covered boulder in a study field in the Brooks Range, Alaska, U.S. Their study field is among the most remote in the world. "These are some of the most beautiful spots," says Payne. "It is remote, and it's just a great place to go
