1. **Open an image file and select the Layers palette**. The Layers palette, at the top of the workspace, holds all of the image's layers. You open this palette and then make changes to a layer. Notice in Figure 10-1 that the Layers palette is in a tabbed panel. You can expand or collapse the Layers palette to make it larger or smaller. The best way to resize the palette so it contains all the layers in the image is to make it full-screen. Figure 10-1. The Layers palette in a tabbed panel. It's easy to access even if you're on a desktop computer. You can set keyboard shortcuts and then drag a layer out of the palette and onto an image or onto another layer. 2. **Click the New Layer icon at the top left of the Layers palette**. A new layer appears at the top of the list. You can also press the Ctrl+N keyboard shortcut to add a layer. To create a new layer that's directly below the existing image, press the Ctrl+Click on the image before creating the new layer. 3. **Open the Info window (Figure 10-2, top) and type a descriptive title, as shown in Figure 10-2, bottom**. The Info window is always open, but if you want to create a new layer, you'll need to close the image window. The Info window tells you the layer's name, where it's located in the image, and other bits of information. A good way to remember where a layer is is that if you can see it—that is, if the layer is in the picture—then it's below the image. So a layer called `_Clouds_` is somewhere in the image below the cloud image you used to open the image. It is hidden if there's no visible cloud. `_Clouds_` is a little misleading since the layer is a cloud. You may want to rename it `_Clouds_`, `_Clouds & Rain_`, `_Foggy Isles_`, or something descriptive, like `_Basin_`. Figure 10-2. The Info window is one of the many ways to get information about an image and its layers. (The info window is also a pop-up tooltip for the cursor.) In this example, the Info window shows the location of a layer in the image. If you click the name in the

With Photoshop, you have to learn Photoshop first, but with Photoshop Elements, you can start right away. The easiest way to learn how to use Elements is to learn how to use Photoshop. This tutorial will help you start your journey. We will cover the basics of starting with the new, easy user interface, the editing and creating the most common types of images. By the end of this tutorial, you will be able to edit, retouch and create your own high-quality images. Note: Photoshop Elements can't open all the files that Photoshop can. To open files from Photoshop, you have to save images as a.psd file (PSD). Prerequisites To follow this tutorial, you will need Photoshop (version CS6, CC 2014) and Photoshop Elements (version 12.0.3, CE 2014). Although you can do this with any Photoshop version, this tutorial is based on version CS6 because Photoshop Elements and Photoshop CE have the same interface. You will also need: Final product. You will need to download this file for your final product. An external hard drive to save your projects on. You will need a computer to follow this tutorial. You must have a printer (either laser or ink) to print your final project. Activate Photoshop Elements for free In the beginning of this tutorial, we will install Photoshop Elements. We need to activate our current version of Photoshop Elements first to continue with this tutorial. To activate your current version of Photoshop Elements: Go to the Start screen and search for Photoshop Elements. Tap on Photoshop Elements and tap on Activate this program. A window will pop up, prompting you to activate it. Activating Photoshop Elements will help you create new users and restore your old user from within your current version of Photoshop Elements. Creating a new user of Photoshop Elements To create a new user of Photoshop Elements: Click on the Switch to Photoshop Elements on the left side of

Selective Color—or Color Dodge—allows you to easily change the color of only a portion of an image. You can do this using a brush, or you can erase parts of the image and paint over them with a different color. The Pen tool is a smart bitmap selection tool that lets you select only parts of an image that are within certain constraints, such as a circle or rectangle. Using it, you can highlight an area of an image or select a specific part. The Curves and Levels dialog box is where you can make some changes to the brightness, contrast, and color of your images. The Lasso tool lets you click and drag to select portions of an image. You can then paint the parts of the image that you want to fill, adjust the size of the selection, or change the shape of the selection. The Magic Wand tool allows you to choose a specific area of the image. The tool then changes the foreground color to match the background color in the selected area. Rotoscoping is a technique used to create stop-motion animations of a person's face or other repetitive actions. A Dof (defocus) adjustment tool, which lets you change the focus of an image. You can use it to make an image more in focus, or less in focus, depending on your needs. The Liquify Filter lets you transform an image in a variety of ways, such as change its shape, distort it, or change the appearance of the edges. The Vector Type Tool lets you create lines, such as text, and add shapes to an image. You can use the tool to create illustrations in images that may have otherwise been too difficult. The Gradient tool lets you paint color gradients over an image. You can adjust the direction of the gradient, the colors that are used, and the intensity of the colors. You can create borders or strokes that use a gradient. The Move tool lets you move an object, such as an image, to a new location on the screen. You can resize the image as you move it. The 3D Object tools let you add 3D effects to your images. You can easily create, edit, and apply 3D effects to any image. If you want to organize your media on your computer, use iTunes. You can open a song, album, or movie in the program and store it in one of its many folders. iTunes automatically organizes your media and can use it to create playlists, burn

Spread the love 30 Englewood, FL — An Englewood, Florida woman is being praised for her actions when her neighbor demanded she take down her Christmas lights. The woman — who has not been named — refused to comply and said she would call the police. “As long as I’m living here in this house, I’m going to be keeping Christmas lights up,” the 68-year-old told KTRK. “That’s how I choose to spend my money.” According to law enforcement, however, she did not have the legal right to decorate her home for the holidays — even though the city’s code allows it. The WTHR reports: Englewood code enforcement officials say they issued a warning to the homeowner and told her to take down her lights by 9 a.m. Friday. They then removed her Christmas lights. Officer Raquel Miller says while the city’s ordinances permit Christmas decorations, the homeowner did not have a permit to operate a business. “She needed to have a business permit for it to be a business, so I think that’s where she ran into a little trouble,” Miller explained. Officer Miller says the woman can take the lights down and put up “something else” in its place, but there is nothing on the city’s website that states you have to obtain a permit to string up a Christmas light display. This is not the first time that the woman has taken a stand against property control policies. In December of last year, she also refused to take down her holiday lights after they were shut down by a code enforcement official. Instead, they made her sign a property maintenance agreement which she refused to sign. The agreement stated that the woman “permitted” any and all property control officers to enter her home to check on her and her property at any time. The woman even referred to the property control officers as “the Gestapo.” “I think they’re hateful,” she said at the time. The Gestapo, however, seem to be on the side of the woman this time. However, it would appear that the woman does not understand that property rights include the right to decorate your home for Christmas or other holidays.
