You can also read the complete review to find out more information.Reason and Relevance I've only ever been taught the following two versions of the Cargo Cult science-fiction story: If it looks like a duck and walks like a duck, and quacks like a duck, then you can be pretty sure it's a duck. If it looks like a duck, and walks like a duck, and quacks like a duck, then you can be pretty sure it's a duck. The first version is more dogmatic, and the second version goes a step further, meaning you don't even have to be 100% sure of your hypothesis. Only 50% sure. The dogmatic version leads to a fun discussion about how many different types of duck there are, while the one where you're only 50% sure leads to philosophy more than science. Yeah, that's why you need science, to prove the first version's "duckness" claim wrong. It sounds more satisfying to be a dick about it and claim that the first version of the story is completely bullshit and people should just accept that 2+2=4. But science will have a way to say that you're wrong and 2+2=5, and maybe you'll wake up the next day and find out your wife of 36 years has left you, and also science will be able to perform a small miracles that would probably make your dick shrivel into a tiny peanut that you hold in your hand, and you'll probably laugh. 5th, which they're going to want you to hold for a while. We're living the Star Trek Childhood. "Good job!", "Glad you got all the bad guys!", "Now you can go to the White House!" "Nope! Go to the Station, the White House is only
