B7.2, a glycoprotein of the B7 family, is known to costimulate allogeneic T cell responses in vivo. Here, we demonstrate that B7.2 can stimulate T cell proliferation and IL-2 production in vitro and that the cellular requirements for B7.2 costimulation of T cells involve cell-to-cell contact and were partially dependent on CD28. A B7.2-dependent signal could be delivered to T cells independently of CD4 and CD8. Notably, we found that activated murine macrophages constitutively express B7.2 and that human monocyte-derived dendritic cells express B7.2 in a time-dependent manner. The B7.2 costimulatory signal could be blocked by the addition of anti-B7.2 mAb in cocultures of macrophages and T cells. Moreover, exogenously added B7.2 costimulated T cell proliferation in the presence of macrophages. However, B7.2 did not costimulate T cells alone. A potential mechanism for these findings is that macrophages may constitutively costimulate T cells in vivo. These results provide a molecular basis for the ability of macrophages to induce allograft rejection in vivo.

Q: How to create BitmapSource with specific size in C++/CLI I need to create a BitmapSource of particular size. I have successfully done this using the Bitmap() constructor, but that would create a bitmap of the size of the device screen. I need to create a bitmap of a specified size in DirectX, but I can't seem to do it without having to specify the device resolution. Is there any way of creating a bitmap of a certain size in c++/CLI?

A: I think what you are trying to achieve is impossible. A
