According to the novel, Judah Ben-Hur is a Jewish prince who, in the year 587 AD, vows revenge on the governor of Egypt for the death of his family. He is helped by Messala, a renegade Jew who used to serve as the governor's bodyguard. Messala offers Ben-Hur financial support, help to escape from Egypt, and a place to stay. Messala conducts a secret meeting with him, in which he attempts to persuade Ben-Hur to convert to Judaism. Ben-Hur refuses, and, following an argument, stabs Messala in the back. The latter chases Ben-Hur, who flees to the fortress of Judea, where he encounters Ben-Gurion, a good friend of the family. He and the Romans cast him into the coliseum, where he becomes the center of attraction. On the eve of his final match, the Roman general who manages the games asks Ben-Hur to be his chariot driver. Ben-Hur agrees, and then frees his long-lost friend, who becomes a Roman by adoption. During the chariot race, Ben-Hur suffers a frightening fall when a fellow driver deliberately bumps him into the path of another chariot. Ben-Hur's.
