The importance of feedback is a really useful general principle. If someone gives me feedback that makes me think of them more positive, that can also be very motivating. Sometimes, my gut instinct is correct. I can trust it to identify people who want to help me. As a consequence of that, a particular rough-seeming attitude, or an unusual hairstyle, or even an unusually confident walk might be a sign of strength, and people might believe themselves to be friendly if they observe that and, say, smile or smile at them back. That's why people might wear a hat when there's a job interview, or carry a suit jacket on a cold day even if they don't intend to be dressing up. Subtle, non-verbal behaviour is an easily learned and easily applied marker, and it's hard to come up with an alternative that works equally well, and is sufficiently distinct to other people, without undermining the format. There are also a couple of things that we know can't work. Sitting or silence isn't helpful for expressing interest, and neither is leaving immediately even if no one is forcing you to leave or say anything, although it's not an absolute. Pouring yourself a drink is fine, as long as it's an alcoholic beverage that's compatible with the mood of the bar, and if it makes you feel better, it can also be helpful, although it's pretty clear that drinking to excess can be harmful. So, but try to avoid this happening. If you're there a bit, or even if you're not, if you know it can be harmful, this doesn't mean that you should be well-slated-up before a job interview, although it is common, what it means is that you ought to be worried about the job interview, not about how you look. It's like wearing a suit and tie to an at-home watching or.
